Traits of Effective Leaders: A Literature Review October 2020.

DOI: 10.5281/zenodo.4268623

ABSTRACT: Utilizing research to identify an effective leader is essential for creating a strategic business operational leadership model. The purpose of this literature review is to focus on select objective and less objective traits of leadership among individuals who are in those positions. We explore literature on objective leadership traits such as gender, age, education level, and job satisfaction level and on the less objective traits such as integrity, energy level, and business knowledge, among others. The goal is to evaluate the hypothesis that some, if not all, of these traits contribute significantly to effective leadership by analyzing the available literature about traits of an effective leader. We will explore the theories that have been proposed on this subject in the literature, identify to what degree researchers have investigated these theories, and try to confirm which of these traits continue to significantly be related to successful leadership. The purpose of this paper is to generate a thorough literature review which can later provide a reliable platform for further qualitative, quantitative, or mixed-methods research to create standards that business practices can utilize as a model for leadership identification and integration.

Exploring Cross-Generational Traits and Management Across Generations in the Workforce

February 2021.

DOI: 10.5281/zenodo.4639566

ABSTRACT: Understanding and identifying the traits of different generations and their effects on management is essential for creating a strategic business operational management structure. The purpose of this literature review is to identify traits that are associated with each generation and determine if any cross-generational traits exist in an effort to capitalize on each group's characteristics and find solutions in managing multiple generations. This research will examine the available literature on each generation consisting of the Traditionalist, Baby Boomers, Generation X, Millennials, and Generation Z; and attempt to identify traits that affect each generation's ability to be managed in the workforce and work with other employees of different generations. The goal is to test the hypotheses that some, if not all of these traits are unique to or are shared across different generations. This review will explore each generation's set of traits, as well as management characteristics for the purpose of developing the groundwork to form successful teams and further explore the best way to create collaboration across different generations by exploiting and acknowledging work values displayed by each generation. This review will also provide a platform for further studies and can be used as a standard to build stronger, more cohesive, and productive teams made of multi-generations
